ABSTRACT

This document examines the types of projects funded by the Library Literacy Program in fiscal year 1993. The variety of literacy activities supported under the Library Services and Construction Act (LSCA) Title VI reflects the diversity of literacy needs in states and communities across the United States. Many factors influence a library's choice of activities for a literacy project: demographics of the target population; economic base of the community; availability of literacy services; nature of existing literacy or adult education services; and availability of human and material literacy resources. Section I discusses major developments taking place among the LSCA Title VI projects and includes selected examples; Section II is a summary of the characteristics common to most of the LSCA Title VI projects; Section III presents several projects that are using unique approaches to provide literacy services; Section IV provides an exhaustive list of literacy activities culled from all the projects; Section V lists project activities, alphabetically by state and library; and Section VI is a statistical analysis of fiscal year 1993 applications and grantees. Foreword

The Library Literacy Program, Title VI of the Library Services and Construction Act (LSCA), makes grants to state and local public libraries to support adult literacy projects. Approximately 250 grants are awarded on a competitive basis each year involving libraries in almost every state.

This booklet includes analyses of the fiscal year 1993 projects, a report on the major developments in the Library Literacy Program, and a description of the activities of each project. The projects are keyed to a list of more than 100 literacy activities that could be offered by libraries, thus showing the scope of each project and enabling the reader to identify the libraries working in specific areas of interest. This list also can be used by the reader to generate ideas for starting or expanding a literacy project.

These projects demonstrate the important role the library community plays in helping to accomplish one of the eight National Education Goals: By the year 2000, every adult American will be literate and will possess the knowledge and skills necessary to compete in a global economy and exercise the rights and responsibilities of citizenship.

The LSCA Title VI program is administered by Louise Sutherland, Acting Director, Discretionary Library Programs Division; Barbara Humes and Carol Cameron Lyons, Program Officers; and Patricia Murray, Program Assistant.

Overview

The Library Literacy Program, Title VI of the Library Services and Construction Act (LSCA), is a discretionary grant program providing support to state and local public libraries for adult literacy programs. State and local public libraries apply directly to the U.S. Department of Education for grants. State libraries may use grant funds to coordinate and plan library literacy programs for adults and to arrange for the training of librarians and volunteers to carry out such programs. Local public libraries may use grant funds to promote the use of the voluntary services of individuals, agencies, and organizations in providing adult literacy programs; to acquire library materials; and to use library facilities for local literacy programs.

The LSCA Title VI Library Literacy Program has been funded annually since 1986. It has funded 1,926 library literacy projects that have enriched the lives of adults and families by helping them discover the benefits of lifelong education.

In FY 93, 423 state and local public libraries submitted proposals in competition for the $8,097,696 grant funds. Of these, 248 libraries in 43 states received funding. The grants were awarded to 12 state libraries and 236 local public libraries. Grants ranged in size from $7,000 to the maximum amount of $35,000.

The FY 93 applications were reviewed by a panel of 72 literacy experts representing local and state libraries, literacy councils, state departments of education, institutions of higher education, and private or other literacy efforts.

Library Literacy Program: Analysis of Funded Projects, 1993 examines the types of projects funded in FY 93. The variety of literacy activities supported under LSCA Title VI reflects the diversity of literacy needs in states and communities across the nation. Many factors influence a library's choice of activities for a literacy project: demographics of the target population, economic base of the community, availability of literacy services, nature of existing literacy or adult education services, and availability of human and material literacy resources.

Section I of the publication is a report of the major developments taking place among the LSCA Title VI projects and includes selected examples of them.

Section II is a summary of the characteristics common to most of the LSCA Title VI projects.

Section III presents several projects that are using unique approaches to provide literacy services.

Section IV is an exhaustive list of literacy activities culled from all of the projects.

Section V presents descriptions of each project alphabetically by state. The list includes the name of the library, its location, the director's name, the funded amount, and the activity codes. Each of the projects has been reviewed and assigned codes corresponding to the activities listed in Section IV. Activity codes were assigned to each project if those activities were clearly stated in the proposal as objectives or key activities of the project and if they were supported by LSCA Title VI funds. The coded projects give the reader an idea of the scope of each project. Conversely, if interested in a particular activity, such as providing a book discussion component (E7), the reader can identify the libraries that have incorporated that activity in their projects by scanning the chart, state by state, for that particular code.

Section VI is a statistical analysis of FY 93 applications and grantees.

Section I

Major Developments

FY 93 has seen a change in the growth pattern of certain literacy services funded under LSCA Title VI. Until this year there has been steady expansion in the number of libraries that: assist adult new readers to make better use of the library's resources; provide computer-assisted instruction; offer low-literate parents the opportunity to learn to read to their children; and provide literacy services to adults who speak English as a second language (ESL).

In FY 93, the LSCA Title VI projects show an increase in only one of these four areas: Computer-assisted instruction has risen slightly (see figure 2). The percentage of libraries that provide library orientation to adult literacy students remains stable (see figure 1). But there is a decrease in the percentage of FY 93 LSCA Title VI projects that are using federal funds to provide family literacy for adults and ESL literacy services (see figures 3 and 4).

The data do not provide an explanation for the decrease. It may be that libraries are offering family and ESL literacy services without using LSCA Title VI grant funds to do so. Figure 6 shows that collaboration, cooperation, and coalition building with various literacy and education organizations and community social service agencies are very important aspects of the projects funded under LSCA Title VI: 95 percent of them work with other community-based agencies.

Nevertheless, the FY 93 projects show that libraries are contributing fresh perspectives on recruiting, teaching, and retaining adult literacy students. A significant number of libraries funded under LSCA Title VI are trying innovative approaches to help adults improve their literacy skills. These grantees are adding to the knowledge of community-based literacy and it should prove instructive to examine their projects as well. A good example is libraries' experiments to involve students more actively with their literacy programs (see figure 5).

Enabling Students To Use the Library

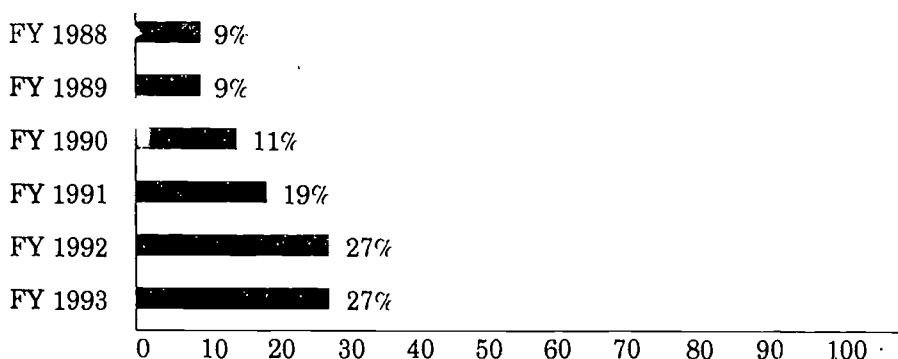

Libraries are noting the importance of linking literacy development to reading content that is relevant to the individual's life. In its FY 93 project description, the Newark Public Library in New Jersey summed up its philosophy about the benefits the library brings to the community and to adult new readers: "The library's relationships with local social service agencies and support organizations facilitate finding appropriate help for students, while [the library's] staff and extensive resources provide the correlation between reading and one's ability to independently find answers to everyday life questions." This philosophy is echoed by the LSCA Title VI programs that are making an effort to educate adult literacy students about the resources available through their local libraries that are useful to their daily life.

Libraries are encouraging both students and tutors to increase their use of and involvement with their local libraries. They are orienting tutors to library services and literacy resources, and students to the variety of information and reading opportunities available in the library. Adult students are gaining a basic understanding of the function and layout of the public library. They are also learning how to find areas of interest such as the reference section, the adult and children's sections, the magazine section, or the job-related materials file. Tutors are participating in inservice workshops presented by library staff to learn how to guide their students in using the library. In this way, libraries are helping adult students use their improved literacy skills for practical and personal purposes.

Twenty-seven percent of the FY 93 grantees are enabling adult literacy students to make use of the library (see figure 1).

The Stratford Library in Connecticut is conducting a library-based lifelong learning program for 350 adult learners who are already enrolled in basic education and literacy classes. They will learn how to use library resources for self-education and to improve parenting skills. The Stratford Lifelong Literacy Project is a collaboration among the library, Literacy Volunteers of America-Greater Bridgeport, the Stratford Board of Education, Sterling House Community Center, and the Stratford Employment and Training Center. This project of five community-based organizations represents a uniting of library resources, education programs, literacy services, and job resources.

The Martinsburg-Berkeley County Public Library in West Virginia has three branch libraries and five affiliate libraries located in the state's Eastern Panhandle. Two inservices will be held in each of these libraries to update librarians on literacy activities and provide them with current contact and referral information. The main library will also provide library tours specially designed for adult new learners. The literacy coordinator will work with other library staff to develop a 1-hour hands-on learning experience for adult literacy students. They will learn how to use all library services and particularly the adult literacy collection. Two of the tours will be for learners who are English speakers. The third tour will be for ESL students, with interpreters participating as necessary.

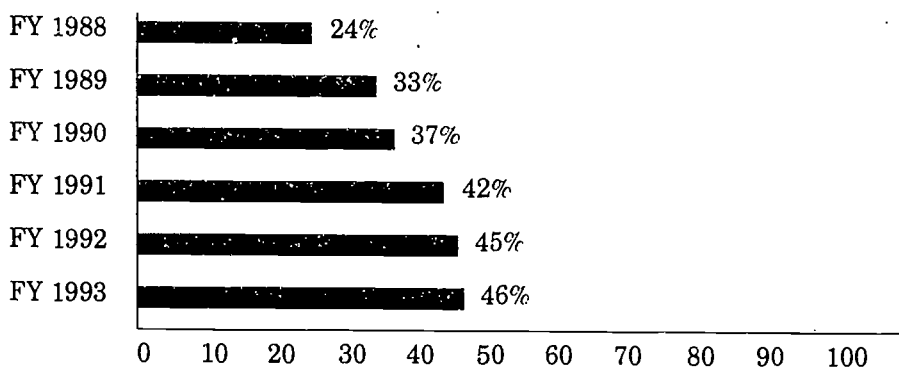

The Rockford Public Library in Rockford, Illinois, is spearheading a project called "Library Services to Literacy." The library collaborates with all area literacy providers (including local businesses that are providing work-site literacy). The library provides extensive library-related activities for tutors and students who especially need encouragement to use library materials to develop a broader base of knowledge and to get information for everyday life experiences. Activities include presentations at tutor training workshops on how to use the library collection and project services; library tours for students; student reading and book discussion clubs; and distribution of library information packets.

The Independence Branch and Albany Park Branch of the Chicago Public Library in Illinois are orienting low-literate adults to the library, using an intergenerational model. Working with staff from five participating elementary schools, Head Start, and the community center's literacy classes, the two branches will recruit a minimum of 50 mothers to come on a regular basis for participatory storyhour programs. These programs introduce the mother and child to reading as a shared experience and provide mothers with an effective, motivational connection to books and reading and familiarity with their local library and library staff.

Computer-assisted Instruction

Libraries continue to embrace computers as a tool for teaching and data management within their literacy projects. Forty-six percent of the FY 93 LSCA Title VI grantees are providing computer-assisted instruction, a slight increase over the previous year (see figure 2).

The Hammond Public Library in Indiana has forged close links with labor unions and adult literacy providers to strengthen the basic literacy skills of the workforce. They focus on the use of computers and software located at adult learning centers in the library and its branches. The library is now expanding its outreach services to adults at senior living sites and senior centers. Seniors will be trained to use laptop computers to tutor their peers in reading, writing, spelling, and mathematics skills.

Santa Clara County Library is conducting a computer-aided literacy project along with four other library jurisdictions in California. Tutors and learners are given a 1-hour individualized computer orientation. The philosophy behind the orientation is to let users "learn by doing" and to demonstrate how the computer contributes to their learning. Through this hands-on experience, learners become comfortable using the computers and begin to see the value of the computer as a literacy tool. Support and training are provided to the tutors and learners by the library literacy staff on a continuous basis. The library is working with a curriculum specialist and programmer to develop computer software that addresses the needs of learners at the lowest reading levels and of the learning disabled. The instructional software will be field tested and evaluated.

The National City Public Library in San Diego, California, will establish a computer lab in the library, purchasing the equipment and software to furnish it. The library will also develop an orientation and training program and link it with three other computer learning programs in the county by using a public access electronic bulletin board system. Adults will learn telecommunicating as they share reading and writing experiences with other learners at remote locations.

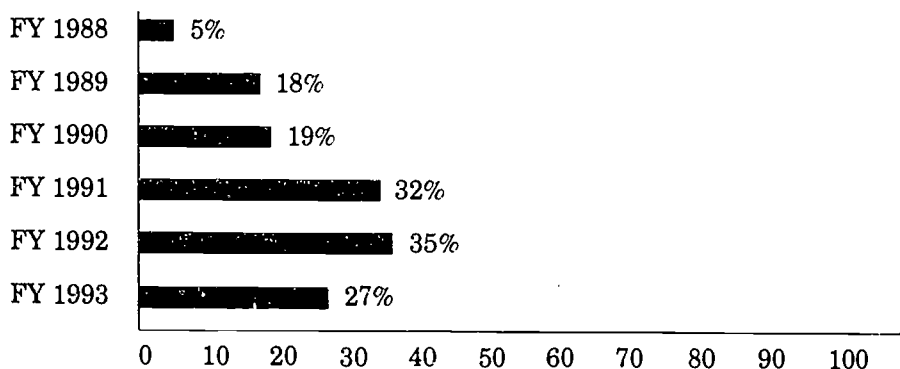

Project Keystrokes at the Juniata County Library in Mifflintown, Pennsylvania, acquaints basic literacy students with the computer. It also enables them to acquire a beginning knowledge of one or more of four standard computer applications used in today's workplace: Word processing, database management, spreadsheet, and graphics. Volunteer tutors are trained in designing computer instruction that serves as reinforcement of the literacy lesson and supports the learner's stated reading, writing, language, mathematics, and career goals. Tutor and student attitudes and their computer and literacy skills will be evaluated before and after the project. Students will also be compared with others not using the computer.

Family Literacy

Libraries are particularly well suited for family literacy programs because they traditionally offer materials and reading services appropriate for all age groups: children, young adults, and adults. Intergenerational or family literacy projects offer low-literate parents the opportunity to learn to read to their children. Often the library is in partnership with other programs such as Head Start or works closely with the school district. Most LSCA Title VI projects aim to provide parental tutoring in conjunction with activities for the child. Within this context libraries funded under LSCA Title VI have developed a variety of approaches.

However, in FY 93 fewer libraries (27 percent) are using LSCA Title VI federal funds to operate family literacy programs than in FY 91 or FY 92. The underlying reasons for this are not evident from the project descriptions. It is possible, however, that because other programs such as Head Start and Even Start are mandated to provide a family literacy component, libraries are providing collaborative services under the aegis of other federal, state, or local programs.

The Redwood City Public Library offers a home-based family literacy program. Parents are tutored twice weekly at the family's residence. In addition, families attend monthly storytimes at the library with their tutors. Parents are introduced to books on parenting skills and given a high quality, hard-cover "family book." All adults are assessed upon entry into the program and reassessed every 6 months for as long as they remain in the program. It is expected that 75 percent of the parents will be mainstreamed into the local adult literacy program, ABE, or community college upon completion of the program.

Providence Public Library in Rhode Island will coordinate a city-wide intergenerational family literacy program. The program is designed to work with a minimum of 200 adults who need literacy support and who have preschool children. In order to maximize outreach efforts, the library will collaborate with six community agencies on the project. The program involves nonreading and limited English-speaking adults in basic literacy, storyhour, and book-related activities they can share with their preschool children. The program, located at four neighborhood branch libraries, consists of three 10-week sessions built around five themes. Two creative dramatics workshops or storytelling programs per cycle are presented, which expand upon these themes and promote parent-child interaction. Two new themes on poetry and education will be developed over the grant period.

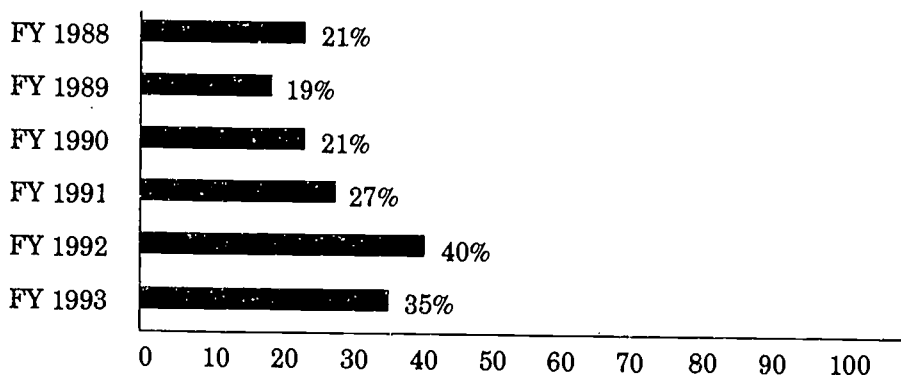

The Massachusetts Board of Library Commissioners in Boston is improving the reading and writing skills of incarcerated male inmates at a medium security facility and females at a minimum security facility. This pilot project is linked to the inmates' needs as parents and caregivers. Three 16-week cycles of literacy instruction will focus on reading, writing, and communication skills. Learners will be trained in the basic techniques of personal writing on the computer. They will be encouraged to either write or dictate a personal story that could serve as the basis for a parent-child reading activity. Inmates will practice reading strategies using children's materials selected for their appropriateness to this program. They will read with their children in the visiting room. Finally, inmates will be able to attend a series of workshops on parenting and child development skills.

English as a Second Language

Libraries continue to enhance their basic literacy services with services designed to accommodate adults who speak English as a second language. Although fewer grantees in FY 93 are using LSCA Title VI federal funds to provide ESL services, this does not signify a drop in services to this population. Many libraries have incorporated ESL services as part of their total literacy program and are using the LSCA Title VI federal funds where there is a need to enhance or expand existing services to ESL adults.

A goal of the Payson City Library in Utah is to help ESL students improve their literacy skills while improving their understanding of life and culture in the United States. Cultural awareness classes will cover such topics as American laws, holidays, and male-female relationships. Life skills topics will include health, preparing for disasters, and drug abuse. Students will attend a city council meeting and mock court hearings to learn more about how American government works. An ESL assistant will work with the school district to provide a record of the 40 hours of instruction required for citizenship. Volunteer literacy tutors will receive inservice training to become familiar with resources appropriate for tutoring ESL students.

The Massachusetts Board of Library Commissioners is working with the city of Lawrence to develop a model curriculum responsive to the cultural needs of ESL learners. This project coordinates literacy services among libraries and adult literacy and human service providers. Their clients will participate in developing materials based on the curriculum model and provide training opportunities for volunteers. The culturally relevant materials produced by learners, documentation of the learning process, and the curriculum model will be disseminated within the state. Dissemination will be done through a series of training workshops, exhibits, and presentations at library and adult education conferences.

The Alameda County Library in Fremont, California, is hiring an ESL coordinator for its adult literacy program because 50 percent of its students speak English as a second language. The coordinator will develop specialized training for tutors and is establishing six ESL groups at various library branches and adult school locations. The coordinator will work closely with the group tutors to include successful writing strategies: process approaches to writing; conversation as part of writing; and oral sharing of personal experience. Language experience will be used throughout the process.

Student Involvement

Many community-based literacy programs are exploring ways to better understand and respond to the learning needs of adult students. They start from the premise that helping adults improve their basic literacy skills requires an approach that differs from the way educators usually teach children. Libraries are continuing to support projects that encourage students to be actively involved in the learning process. They are also encouraged to participate in book discussion groups, program administration, management, public relations, and program evaluation. Many students are developing leadership skills that enable them to speak out to others in their community about the importance of lifelong and continued education. Some students are working with print media or nonprint mass media to communicate their stories of living and learning. Others serve in peer support groups. In these and other ways interest in education may be sustained.

The Oakland Public Library in California is conducting two projects of interest. One will develop multicultural, multiethnic literacy materials from the oral histories and written autobiographies of literacy students. Students will be interviewed and their stories will be edited on four different levels to correspond to four reading levels. All printed materials created by this project will be added to the circulating collections at all branch libraries. They will also be available for students and tutors to use in their lessons. Oakland Public Library's other project will increase the retention of adult students by offering them the opportunity to improve their study skills and their self-esteem. A teacher will also train four student apprentices to continue the classes as needed when the pilot project is over. A special 24-hour hotline will play a motivational message designed by students.

Adult new readers at the Logan Library in Logan, Utah, have formed a support group. It is an opportunity for new readers to boost their self-esteem by sharing growth experiences with empathetic peers. During meetings members discuss current issues and concerns that impact their personal lives. The group provides leadership training for new readers. The Student Steering Committee plans and implements meetings, activities, and programs. Students edit the student newsletter, compile and publish student writings, recruit new students into the program, participate in fundraising activities, and help organize an annual regional student leadership conference.

The San Francisco Public Library in California has identified a need for stronger learner involvement in its literacy program and for more opportunities for adult learners to meet and learn from one another. Many adult learners who come to the program for help feel that they alone have problems reading and writing. The shame they feel often keeps them isolated. Tapping into the variety of skills, talents, and resources of the adult new learners, the library is hosting an event for literacy program participants, including adult learners, tutors, and staff. Participants will serve as planners and speakers for the event. Also, an adult learner council will be formed to provide support to students and direction to the program. Volunteer students serve as telephone contacts.

Section II

Common Characteristics

LSCA Title VI projects are designed to initiate, continue, expand, or improve adult literacy services. These projects engage in many activities, which we have grouped by common characteristics, as shown in figure 6.

Many libraries funded in FY 93 (70 percent) recruit adults who wish to improve their basic reading, writing, and computing skills and enable them to participate in literacy programs to meet their needs. They also actively seek volunteers to be trained as tutors.

Virtually all FY 93 LSCA Title VI projects (95 percent) coordinate their services with literacy organizations and community-based organizations that provide similar or related literacy services. Activities include: keeping other literacy organizations in the community apprised of the project; referring students to other instructional programs suitable to their needs; serving as a member of a literacy coalition; and conducting the project as a joint venture with another organization. Many agencies—public schools, community colleges and other institutions of higher education, businesses, civic organizations, social welfare agencies, and individuals—are becoming involved with efforts to provide adults with basic literacy skills. Libraries help facilitate involvement with and coordination of literacy activities among these various entities.

Projects funded under FY 93 LSCA Title VI indicate that libraries commonly provide public awareness activities (79 percent). Their goals are: to inform the public of the availability of literacy services or materials; to recruit students and tutors; and to promote awareness of the nature of illiteracy and its effects on the individual and society.

Ninety percent of the FY 93 library literacy projects use their funds to establish or increase the number of training workshops during the year. Workshops may consist of training volunteers to provide instruction to adult new learners, training individuals to teach others to be tutors, or training librarians to provide services to adult new learners. Workshops also include inservice training and professional development opportunities to expand and improve existing skills.

The demand for more and better library literacy materials increases as community members become more involved in providing and receiving literacy services. As more students are recruited, more materials have to be added to library collections; with increased use of literacy materials, more materials have to be replaced; as innovative methods of adult instruction are introduced, new materials have to be evaluated and selected. Seventy-seven percent of the FY 93 grantees are using LSCA Title VI funds to acquire literacy collections for their libraries, to expand and improve existing collections, or to develop their own noncommercial materials.

Many libraries are providing technology-assisted approaches for literacy programs. Sixty-five percent of all FY 93 LSCA Title VI grantees are using some kind of electronic media in their instructional program, such as audio and video cassettes, films, and computer software. Audiovisual materials offer another means by which adults can improve their reading, writing, and computational skills.

Fifty-eight percent of the FY 93 projects provide specialized instruction or learning opportunities. Some projects are combining a variety of methods to tailor teaching to the needs of their students or to enrich the tutoring of basic skills. For example, some projects are publishing and disseminating students' written work, conducting book discussion groups, or providing special instruction for persons with learning disabilities. Most of the literacy instruction offered by the projects continues to be one-to-one instruction using volunteer tutors. Many of the literacy projects also make use of the teaching methods and materials developed by several nationally recognized nonprofit organizations.

See Section IV for a detailed list of activities.

Section III

Selected Projects

The following examples have been selected to illustrate the breadth and diversity of adult literacy activities conducted by projects funded under the FY 93 Library Literacy Program.

The Richards Free Library in Newport, New Hampshire, is using mass media to introduce its adult tutorial program to the public and to recruit volunteers and students. The library is working with a video consultant to produce several 30-second television and radio spots that will reach residents of west central New Hampshire. The spots will advertise the library's toll-free literacy hotline number, which will improve the recruitment rate of students and tutors in this rural area. Finally, the library is producing a video that explains the use of library computers, various literacy software, and other literacy collection resources.

The Eisenhower Public Library District in Harwood Heights, Illinois, has formed a partnership with Triton Community College's Access to Literacy Program, Rosary College Graduate School of Library and Information Science, and eight other public libraries within Illinois' regional Suburban Library System. Their goal is to provide literacy awareness training and a library education component for practicing librarians and graduate library students. The partnership is developing a model literacy course for librarians. The credit course is entitled Seminar in Library Services: Literacy Training. A literacy handbook and training manual will be developed and used to pilot a model library-based literacy program in one of the participating libraries.

The Adrian Public Library in Michigan has a partnership with the Adrian adult education program. Their goal is to help phase adult learners into traditional adult education classes as the learners' skills and confidence improve. Students who have improved their literacy skills with one-to-one tutoring will have access to trained volunteer tutors in the adult education classes. Tutors work with adult basic education (ABE) and ESL students in four schools to assure classroom success.

The Chula Vista Public Library in California is developing small-group writing classes. They are designed to address the serious lack of practical and personal writing skills of 100 adult learners enrolled in the literacy program. An instructor will conduct five 8-week classes with adult learners, using techniques based on current educational research on writing as a process. The instructional techniques will serve as a model for 40 volunteer tutors who also will attend classes. Tutors will confer with the instructor to ensure that techniques learned through participation in the class will carry over into their one-to-one tutoring situations. In addition, the library will develop and present a minimum of three workshops on effective writing instruction to train 30 adult literacy practitioners and volunteers throughout San Diego County.

Joint Projects

Joint projects involve a state or local public library in a common endeavor with at least one other state or local public library to provide adult literacy services. Joint projects enable individual libraries to pool their resources and reach more people.

Nine of the FY 93 LSCA Title VI projects are joint projects in which 9 public libraries are working with a total of 35 other public libraries. None of the participating libraries in a joint project may receive more than the maximum award of $35,000 individually. The total amount of a joint project may equal the number of participants times $35,000. The joint projects supported in FY 93 received amounts that range from $29,060 to $170,593.

For example, The Monroe County Library and the Peterstown Public Library are expanding their regular reading and writing curricula to include mathematics instruction. The libraries are developing and piloting modules to train tutors how to use manipulatives and concrete activities in teaching mathematics to adult students. Other modules will be developed to teach parents how to support their children's learning of mathematics competencies. The libraries will develop age appropriate materials and activities that are based on real-life situations. The content of the lessons is based on the standards developed by the National Council of Teachers of Mathematics. In conjunction with this approach, the library will circulate a basic mathematics video series.
